Meet the nicest people

You meet the nicest people when your on a Honda seems to still hold true. On the past few return trips from the farm, I have stopped in Paris Texas for lunch. I like to sit next to the window so I can see my bike. On one occasion, I noticed a SUV pull in next to the bike. The passenger door opened and a mature gentleman eased out. After closing the door, he turned around to look at the bike. A grin worked its way across his face and he motioned his wife to come over and take a look at it. She did and proceeded on, but he stayed awhile longer taking in all the things on my bike. He had the expression of a young boy looking through the window of a toy store. After I finished my meal, I walked by their table and introduced myself as the owner of the motorcycle. The gentleman's eyes light up and he started telling me of his adventures on an Indian during his youth. He mentioned the lack of fancy helmets and other safety things like my mess jacket back in his day and hoped I used it all the time. Seems he had a run-in with a fence post during one of his mis-adventures. On another trip, same window, I watched a fellow come up and start looking at my bike taking in all the controls and details. A lady walking in from another direction said something to him and then both of them were talking about it while pointing at different items before they came in. A few minuets later, the man and his family sat down at the table next to mine and started asking questions about the Gold Wing. Turned out he rode an H-D curser and was thinking of getting a Gold Wing so his wife would ride with him. We exchanged riding experiences and trips. I outlined GWRRA to him and his wife and stressed the safety and education. Both were interested in the headset in my helmet and mess jacket. I explained to them how I felt cooler with the full face helmet and jacket on because I didn't dehydrate as fast. Also, I always had my protection on should an accident occurre. We finished our meals at the same time and they continued to talk to me as I put on my jacket, helmet and gloves. They were impressed I was so well protected. When I started the bike his wife said she liked how quiet it was. I bet he will be buying a Gold Wing soon.
